

1. Provide an example of how you might still communicate uncertainty in an experimental result where your p-value was less than your predetermined false positive threshold (e.g., $p < 0.05$).
2. Why can you not infer that a null hypothesis is true if a NHST fails to pass your predetermined false positive threshold (e.g., $p > 0.05$)